Ad Fontes Media rates The New York Times in the Skews Left category of bias and as Reliable, Analysis/Fact Reporting in terms of reliability. The New York Times is a daily newspaper based in New York City. Founded in 1851, the paper has won 130 Pulitzer Prizes, more than any other media.

Overall Score

The following are the overall bias and reliability scores for The New York Times according to our Ad Fontes Media ratings methodology.

Reliability: 41.04

Bias: -8.08

Panels of analysts from Ad Fontes rate it for reliability and bias. Each panel has a different perspective, leaning, and one center-leaning analyst.

The team considers a variety of factors when we consider the content's veracity and reliability. These scores are then added to the chart on a weighted scale to determine the content's overall reliability score.

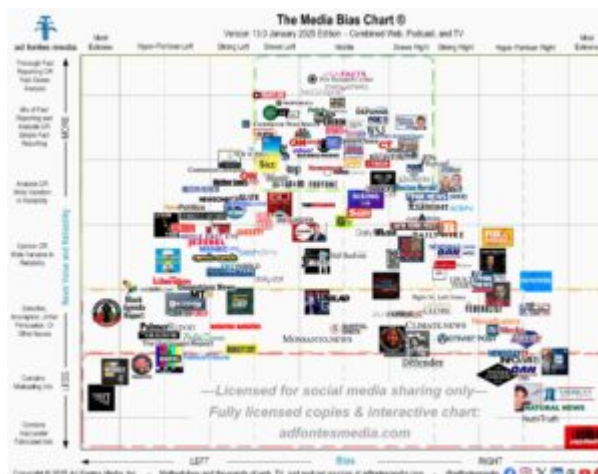

To determine sample content's bias score, we compare it to other reporting on the same topic. Each of these scores is then added to the chart on a weighted scale to determine the content's overall bias score.

The bias rating, demonstrated on the chart's horizontal axis, rates sources from most extreme left to middle to most extreme right. The chart's vertical axis, rates sources from most reliable to least reliable, with propaganda and inaccurate/fabricated information at the bottom.

Reliability scores for articles and sources range from 0 to 100. Scores above 24 are generally good; scores below 24 are generally poor. Some sources have high reliability scores because they have a high degree of accuracy and some because they have a high degree of transparency.

Bias scores for articles and sources range from -10 to 10. Scores closer to 0 are being more left, higher positive scores are being more right, and scores closer to 0 are being minimally biased, equally balanced.
